Handwriting expert Reed Hayes walks to the Superior Court courtroom yesterday afternoon to resume his testimony in the ongoing bench trial of Sen. Paul A. Manglona's lawsuit against his siblings over a piece of land. Hayes, who was involved in the Barack Obama birth certificate saga, testified that it was not the signature of Manglona's late mother, Bernadita, in the purported deed of gift for the land.

WELLINGTON, New Zealand (AP)—The U.S. Navy said it rescued three fishermen Tuesday who were adrift on a boat in the Pacific Ocean for eight days.

The men were reported missing Feb. 12 after failing to return from a fishing trip in Micronesia, the Navy said. The men had food and water aboard their 19-foot skiff but no safety equipment or radios.

2 arrested in separate domestic violence incidents

Two men were arrested in separate domestic violence incidents on Saipan last Saturday and Monday.

Nathan Mario Aguon Roppul, 28, was apprehended for assault and battery, and disturbing the peace.

Gregory Vincent Cabrera Cing, 35, was arrested for two counts of assault and battery and one count of child abuse.

Police said that Roppul's wife was crying and feared for her and her child's life as her husband has two previous cases of domestic violence and is still on probation.

In Cing's case, a responding police officer said that the wife and her 9-year-old daughter were seen crying while walking away from their house.

At hearings last Tuesday before Superior Court associate judges Teresa Kim-Tenorio and Joseph N. Camacho, a $10,000 cash bail was imposed on Roppul, while Cing was allowed to post a $1,000 cash bail and $9,000 unsecured bond.

In Roppul's case, police responded to a home in Gualo Rai last Saturday at 10:28pm after receiving a call from a woman who reported that her husband beat her up. The alleged victim told police that Roppul got angry after she called her mother to babysit her 8-month-old child. Roppul allegedly kicked her thrice in the stomach and slammed a car door twice against her back.

In Cing's case, a 9-year-old girl called the police last Monday at 12:19am at her mother's instruction because of the beating.

The wife told police that she and Cing were arguing about the domestic violence complaint she had previously filed that led to Cing's arrest.

Cing told her to leave the house with their daughter. As the wife was leaving, Cing pushed her, causing her to fall. Cing then allegedly grabbed her left leg and twisted it. She instructed their daughter to call the police. He then allegedly kicked her on the left inner thigh.

Upon the police's arrival, Cing threatened to jump from the house's second-floor balcony if the officers do not leave. After several hours, police arrested Cing at 3am.

Last Feb. 12 at 12:22am, police officers were also dispatched to a reported domestic violence involving Cing. (Ferdie De La Torre)

Landowner sues rental car company for allegedly encroaching on property

By FERDIE DE LA TORRE
ferdie_delatorre@saipantribune.com
REPORTER

A landowner is suing the company that owns a rental car business in Garapan that used to lease his property, for allegedly encroaching on the property and causing the new lessee to withhold the remaining lease payment of $1.1 million.

Jesus T. Guerrero is suing Ju & Han Corp., owner of Asia Rent-A-Car, for trespass, encroachment, intentional interference with contract, and Zoning Code violation.

Guerrero is demanding damages, court costs, and attorney's fees. He is represented in the case by Charles P. Reyes Jr.

Guerrero wants the court to issue a permanent injunction preventing the company from trespassing on, removing, and converting his property.

When contacted yesterday for comments, a Ju and Han Corp. representative said they already have a lawyer in the case.

According to Reyes in the complaint, Guerrero is the fee simple owner of a 1,307-square-meter property in Garapan. In 1992, Guerrero leased his property to Insurance and Business Management Corp., owner of Marianas International Travel Agency, an entity owned and controlled by his brother Juan, for a 25-year period.

MITA Travel then assigned the lot to Juan, who, in turn, assigned his interest in that lease to Juan T. Guerrero & Associates Inc., which owns Isla Realty Management.

In 1995, Juan T. Guerrero & Associates Inc. leased a portion of the lot (100 square meters) to Ju and Han Corp. and then renewed that lease several times.

On Dec. 4, 2007, the lawyer said, Ju & Han Corp. entered into a lease agreement with the Department of Public Lands for an 11-square-meter public property adjacent to Guerrero's lot.

In April 2017, Juan T. Guerrero and Associates terminated its lease with Ju & Han effective Aug. 15, 2017.

Reyes said Guerrero paid Juan $300,000 to terminate all of his company's lease agreements on the lot, vacate the premises, evict all tenants, including Ju & Han, and deliver the premises to a new lessee, De En International LLC.

Guerrero entered into a lease agreement with De En International LLC for the lot on Aug. 15, 2017.

The lease agreement, Reyes said, required De En International LLC to pay Guerrero a total of $3.1 million.

Guerrero received $2 million and was to receive the remaining $1.1 million by Aug. 29, 2017.

However, Reyes said, Ju & Han did not immediately vacate the premises when the lease expired on Aug. 15, 2017. Instead, it only vacated the spot on Sept. 8, 2017.

Reyes said that when Guerrero inspected the space, he noticed that the defendant damaged his property and removed a glass door and some other related office building materials.

Reyes said the defendant right now operates its vehicle rental business partially on public land and partially on the plaintiff's property.

Aging Office completes national report

Three years since the first successful completion and certification of the 2015 National Aging Program Information System State Program report, Office of Aging director Walter Manglona said the division has renewed, completed, and submitted the report for the NAPIS this year.

NAPIS is a state reporting tool that the Administration for Community Living-Administration on Aging uses to monitor performance and collect information on the Older Americans Act. State agencies on aging are required to provide detailed information on OAA program participants, services, and expenditures annually by submitting comprehensive state program reports.

These reports help in furthering the vision for the elderly," said Community and Cultural Affairs Secretary Robert Hunter.

That vision allows the elderly an opportunity to fully participate in all aspects of society and community life and be continuously productive, be able to maintain their health and independence for as long as time allows, and remain in their own homes and communities for as long as possible without the isolation of life in institutions such as nursing homes.

Manglona said the Office on Aging also completed its report on the Nutrition Service Incentive Program.

"[NSIS] has been a consistent part of assisting our man'amko. It is important to note that the NSIP meal count data...is a key factor in calculating state, territory, and tribal organization's...grant allocations. ...Currently, our division is expanding services to the elderly at home and their caregivers, introducing new activities to our man'amko, working on some building repairs, welcoming more clients, improving our daily supportive services, and building capacity with Rota and Tinian and addressing challenges within the program," Manglona said.

The division is now awaiting the issuance of the Variance Report Justification for ACL's review.

"The NSIP further provides support grants to states, territories, and eligible tribal organizations to support the Congregate and Home-Delivered Nutrition Programs by providing an incentive to serve more meals. Through this funding opportunity, we are able to receive a grant as cash, commodities, or a combination of cash and commodities. With this, we look forward to continuing to enhance our services to our man'amko and the community," Manglona said.

Gov. Ralph DLG Torres noted that the division has maintained a high performance. "We've seen a steady rise of active man'amko in our centers. The Aging Office has played a key role in serving thousands of meals as part of their nutrition program and has been a strong advocate for the needs of our elderly." (PR)

Vaccination campaign ends next week

By BEA CABRERA
bea_cabrera@saipantribune.com
REPORTER

The CNMI Division of Public Health Immunization Program is finishing up its vaccination campaign in clinics, public and private school, and day care centers. The program was set from Jan. 22 to March 1, 2018.

The schools that participated in the program are Mt. Carmel School; Marianas, Kagman, and Saipan Southern high schools; Francisco M. Sablan, Tanapag, Dandan, Hopwood, and Chacha middle schools; and William S. Reyes, Koblerville, Gregorio T. Camacho, Garapan, San Vicente, and Oleai elementary schools.

According to Immunization Program manager Jeremy Sasamoto of the Communicable Disease Bureau of the Division of Public Health, they brought the campaign to schools to make it easier for parents to get their children vaccinated.

"Immunization is required for school attendance and we go to schools to help parents who have difficulties coming to one of our clinics. We typically start our school vaccination campaign by meeting with the Education commissioner and all the principals of our public and private schools," he said.

"Working with our school partners, we come up with a schedule for our visits and we provide a letter to parents indicating that their child is not up-to-date with required immunizations. The letters, which contain a consent form, are distributed at school and all signed consent forms are collected prior to our visit to the school," he added.

With over 1,000 children still in need of vaccination, a second round of vaccination took place.

"We began our school vaccination campaign for the 2017-2018 school year in October and we concluded in December. However, due to the significant number of children who were still not up-to-date with required immunizations, I decided to conduct a second round of on-campus vaccinations to give a second opportunity for parents to get their children vaccinated in school," he said.

"We've never done a second round of on-campus vaccinations before and we're working closely with our partners in health at the Public School System and our private schools to make this second round successful," he added.

Sasamoto said the vaccination program is based on Public Law 6-10, which requires all children be up-to-date with required immunizations prior to enrollment in any school or daycare/childcare facility in the CNMI.

"The law also states that a valid health certificate must be presented upon enrollment and registration at any school or daycare as this provides evidence that the child is up-to-date with required immunizations and free from communicable diseases. These health certificates must also be maintained on site at the school or daycare where the child is enrolled, ready for inspection," he said.

"All students who are delinquent or not up-to-date with required immunizations will be given a notice and remedial action must be taken within two weeks of receiving our notice. Failure to do so risks having the child suspended from school until all immunization requirements are met," he added.

Sasamoto said that suspending children without health certificates from school is the absolute last thing that the division would want to do.

"We don't want to resort to suspension and keep the child away from school but it's the law and we are tasked to enforce these public health laws. I want to say that these laws are not a barrier to getting an education, they are intended to protect our community, especially our children, from communicable diseases," he said.

He said the job of the Immunization Program is to prevent the introduction and spread of vaccine preventable communicable diseases in the Commonwealth.

"We constantly work...to ensure our community is protected from terrible diseases, some of which are currently causing outbreaks on islands and territories close to the CNMI," he said.

personal conversations with several members of the congressional working group tasked to study the extension of the CW program, the Bloomberg Businessweek article, "A Chinese Casino Has Conquered a Piece of America," could not affect the decision making on the transitional period extension.

"I would say at this time—with caution—that I don't think [the Bloomberg article] would affect [the U.S. Congress' decision on S.2325], but that is just my own personal observation, based on personal conversations I've had, not on any official positions," said Sablan.

S. 2325 is the product of U.S. Sen. Lisa Murkowski (R-AK), leader of the congressional working group and the chairperson for the U.S. Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources. Murkowski's working group includes several key congressmen and senators as well as Sablan and Torres.

Sablan said that some of the members of the working group have some understanding of the issues of the CNMI since they have been involved with the group last summer.

Still, Sablan believes federal and local investigations must be held.

"It's important I think that federal and [local] authorities look closely into this article and some of the allegations made in there, because the people of the Marianas deserve to know the truth," he said, reiterating the seriousness of the allegations raised by the article.

The Bloomberg piece alleged that Torres and several of his family members have received money in exchange for favors for casino operator, Imperial Pacific International (CNMI) LLC.

IPI is the company that was awarded the sole casino licensee in the CNMI, and, since opening, claims to have raked in over six times more cash than the palatial casinos in Macau.

"There are some serious allegations there, of violations of law, but having said that, the people of the Marianas need to know the truth and it's also important to give the governor and his family the full opportunity to clear their names," Sablan said. "I don't want to have another Tinian Dynasty here in the middle of Saipan."

tioned signature of Paul Manglona's late mother, Bernadita, does not match her 18 known exemplar signatures.

Hayes is the expert witness of Paul Manglona's siblings, Priscilla M. Torres and Thomas A. Manglona, who are among the siblings the senator is suing over the property.

Hayes said that, in his opinion, Bernadita did not sign the purported deed of gift dated July 11, 1985, that gave the property solely to Sen. Paul Manglona.

"I'm absolutely certain," he said about his findings.

Paul Manglona, who is also suing Associate Justice John A. Manglona over the disputed 4,181-square-meter property, wants the court to declare him the owner of the property by virtue of the 1985 deed of gift. Their mother, Bernadita, is already deceased.

Torres and Thomas Manglona, co-administrators of the Bernadita estate, asserted that their brother, Paul Manglona, does not entirely inherit the disputed land as their mother's signature in the document had been forged.

Hayes testified that he came to his conclusion based on the totality of the 18 sample signatures of Bernadita that he reviewed. The samples, called exemplars, are apparently known signatures that Bernadita made from 1984 to 2008.

Hayes agreed during cross-examination that some illnesses could change a person's signature.

Paul Manglona is represented in the case by Rene Holmes and Mark Scoggins.

The Manglona siblings are represented by Samuel Mok.

Mok objected when Holmes asked about Hayes' involvement in the Obama birth certificate controversy, but he was overruled by judge pro tem David A. Wiseman, who is presiding over the trial.

Hayes recounted that he was tasked by the Maricopa County volunteer group Cold Case Posse to look at the electronic PDF image of Obama's long form birth certificate. Hayes said he evaluated the authenticity of the PDF version of the Obama "certificate of live birth" that was released by the White House and posted on the White House website in April 2011.

Hayes said he posted an article online in August 2016 about the Obama birth certificate issue because of false information spreading in the internet.

Hayes said he only examined the PDF document itself and not the original birth certificate. In the article Hayes wrote that there are indications that the certificate of live birth released by the White House in 2011 may be a manufactured document or perhaps even an outright forgery. He, however, emphasized that without examining the original document housed at the Hawaii Department of Health, there can be no absolute certainty.

The trial will resume at 8:30am today, Thursday.

CNMI sustainable development plan in the works

The Commonwealth Planning and Development Advisory Council convened its inaugural meeting on Tuesday, Feb. 20, 2018, for the creation of the CNMI’s first comprehensive sustainable development plan.

Established by Public Law 20-20, the advisory council provides policy direction for the new Office of Planning and Development, which will be led by its director, Kodep Ogumoro-Uludong.

Gov. Ralph DLG. Torres appointed Ogumoro Uludong on Jan. 8, 2018, and has since initiated the office’s mission of providing short and long-range guidance for economic, infrastructural, and physical development for the CNMI.

A former project manager for the Micronesia Islands Nature Alliance, Ogumoro-Uludong holds a bachelor’s degree in Political Science from the University of Southern California and a master’s degree in Communication from the University of Texas, El Paso.

He also held a fellowship in conservation under Rare (www.rare.org) and completed a Pacific Island Community Adaptive Co-Management Course at the University of South Pacific in Fiji.

Presently, he also serves as a director for the Commonwealth Development Authority and the Northern Marianas Housing Corp.

“The mission of the Office of Planning and Development is to establish development objectives, standards, and principles for our islands’ desired land use for residential, recreational, agricultural, commercial, and industrial needs. As outlined in Public Law 20-20, the goal of this office and this advisory council is an enormous task, but it is also a rewarding undertaking. With community engagement and the resources, we can tangibly set the course for development in the CNMI that is consistent with the proper protection of our environment and historical heritage,” Ogumoro-Uludong said.

Per P.L. 20-20, the advisory council consists of the: Bureau of Environmental and Coastal Quality, Department of Public Works, Department of Public Lands, Department of Lands and Natural Resources, Department of Commerce, Commonwealth Zoning Office, Commonwealth Utilities Corp., Marianas Visitors Authority, Office of the Mayor of Rota, Office of the Mayor of Tinian and Aguiguan, Office of the Mayor of Saipan, Office of the Mayor of the Northern Islands, Saipan Chamber of Commerce, and Governor’s Strategic Economic Development Council.

At the inaugural meeting, members unanimously voted to include the Department of Labor, the CNMI Public School System, the Northern Marianas College, and the Northern Marianas Trades Institute to include policy discussions on U.S. workforce development. The council elected Commerce Secretary Mark O. Rabauliman to serve as its chairman.

Torres noted that the council is an impressive composition of individuals with a desire to create a development plan that advocates for environmental protection, sustainability, and infrastructure effectiveness.

“With the surge of economic development in the CNMI over the last couple of years, it has been a goal of mine and the Legislature to properly plan out a sustainable path to prosperity on all three islands moving forward. We all want to ensure that we have the infrastructure put in place to accommodate the existing developments, but we must also advocate for our cultural preservation and environmental stewardship. The creation of this long-term plan takes all of us, and we are looking forward to the policy discussions between our government, our private sector, and other community groups,” Torres added.

Elements of the comprehensive sustainable development plan include land use, community design, transportation, regulations, public facilities, public lands, housing, redevelopment, conservation, recreation, safety, tourism, development policy, capital improvements, labor and workforce development, and best practices (from other jurisdictions).

Senate President Arnold I. Palacios, who authored P.L.

20-20, added that the plan is to define what is sustainable growth and to ensure that agencies are communicating with one another.

“Over the last several years, the governor, the Legislature, and I have conversations with our constituencies to ensure that our infrastructure will be ready for these new developments, and our community has every right to know where we stand. It is that very reason that I drafted this law to create the planning office to properly plan for our future. Not only do we need a master plan, but we need to increase the effectiveness of government and private actions and improve the coordination among the different agencies. Ultimately, we must leverage our resources to guide the future development of the CNMI in a sustainable manner that benefits every single person that call these islands home,” Palacios said. (PR)

Over 100 NMI homes, biz could get high-speed internet

» Locations eligible for support from FCC's Connect America Fund this summer

WASHINGTON—Over 100 rural homes and businesses in Northern Mariana Islands that are currently unserved by high-speed Internet service could get connectivity in the near future.

These homes and businesses are in unserved areas of Northern Mariana Islands eligible for financial support from the next phase of Federal Communication Commission's Connect America Fund, which helps offset the high cost of extending broadband service into rural areas. The FCC will be distributing these funds through an innovative "reverse auction," which is scheduled to launch on July 24.

"Connecting the unconnected in rural America is my top priority," said FCC chair Ajit Pai. "I'm excited that our CAF auction will provide opportunities for innovative companies and cooperatives to bridge the digital divide for the Northern Mariana Islands consumers and small businesses that lack high-speed access today."

Nationwide, providers will compete for up to $2 billion in support to expand access to broadband to nearly a million homes and locations in unserved rural areas over the next decade. The auction will provide opportunities for new entrants to the marketplace, regardless of technology, including phone companies, fixed wireless service providers, satellite providers, cable companies and electric utility broadband providers.

By harnessing market forces, the auction is designed to provide consumers with high-quality, broadband service in an efficient, cost-effective way. The application period for providers seeking to participate in the auction runs from March 19 to March 30.

Broadband access is essential in the 21st century for jobs, education, information and economic development.

Since 2011, the FCC has targeted more than $9 billion in support for rural broadband expansion to over 4 million homes and small businesses through its Connect America Fund. For more information on the Connect America Fund Phase II auction, visit <https://www.fcc.gov/connect-america-fund-phase-ii-auction>. (PR)

According to a chart showing Northern Mariana Islands counties with areas eligible for support from the auction, along with the number of homes and businesses (locations), 83 sites on Rota will be qualified for the FCC program, while two will be qualified on Saipan and 21 on Tinian.

For more information on the Connect America Fund Phase II auction, visit <https://www.fcc.gov/connect-america-fund-phase-ii-auction>. (PR)

IPI employee sues bank owner over alleged hot coffee injury

An employee of Imperial Pacific International (CNMI) LLC is suing the owner of Bank of Guam over alleged injuries he suffered when the bank's building in Garapan caused him to spill the hot coffee he was holding on his hand.

Randyl W. Kruid, through counsel Bruce Berline, is suing BankGuam Holding Co. in federal court for negligence. He wants BankGuam Holding held liable to pay him damages in an amount to be proven at trial.

As of press time Wednesday, Saipan Tribune was still trying to obtain comments from BankGuam Holding.

Imperial Pacific offices are located on the fourth floor of the Bank of Guam building in Garapan where the company holds trainings.

According to Berline in the complaint filed Wednesday, Kruid, a resident of South Dakota, worked in Imperial Pacific's offices. Last Nov. 22, Kruid arrived at the Bank of Guam building for work early in the morning and, as usual, took the stairs up to his fourth-floor office.

Berline said that after arriving at his office, Kruid realized that he had to return to his vehicle to retrieve his computer.

Berline said that, with a hot cup of coffee in his hand, the plaintiff walked down the stairs to the parking lot where his vehicle was parked and retrieved his laptop.

Kruid then got on the building's elevator and pushed the button to ascend to the fourth floor. Once the elevator doors closed and the elevator began ascending, it allegedly unexpectedly started to violently shake and shudder.

Berline said the elevator's sudden shaking and shuddering was so violent that it caused the hot coffee to spill on the back of Kruid's left hand.

He said Kruid's hand was burned and required medical attention.

Berline said BankGuam Holding and its agents failed to properly inspect or maintain the elevator so that it was in a safe and proper operating condition. (Ferdie de la Torre)

Do-nothing politicians on wrong side of gun reform battle

By JEREMY RING

Sun Sentinel

Jeremy Ring is a former Florida state senator, (D) 29th District. Ring is now running to serve as Florida's next chief financial officer.

As a statewide candidate for chief financial officer of Florida, I will be using much of my platform to call for sensible gun reform. I have a statewide voice and I plan on using it.

This one hit home. Marjory Stoneman Douglas is one mile from where I raise my children. I knew students and families affected by this senseless tragedy.

While school shootings are too common, they are never routine when they occur in your backyard. I, like others, am calling for a complete assault weapon ban along with more funding and services for mental health. Per our amazing Sheriff Scott Israel, we need to give law enforcement better tools to involuntarily hold for 72 hours persons who are believed to be a danger to society. I am calling on the federal government to reform our HIPPA laws so families who know that someone close to them is capable of such atrocity and can have access to medical records to alert law enforcement.

Beyond policy, I will call out every lawmaker who does nothing, repeats the BS line that it's too early to discuss changes, and only gives prayers without a concrete plan for solving this horrific epidemic.

Gov. Rick Scott, the next time you come to Parkland, have the guts to say you will do everything in your power to create laws that ban assault weapons. Sen. Marco Rubio, don't come to our community if you have the nerve to say that it's too early to speak about sensible gun reform. If you can't stand in front of the camera and tell us that you wholeheartedly support gun reform, then don't stand in front of that camera. Lastly, don't ever tell a community who has just lost so many of our best and brightest that creating new gun laws wouldn't have stopped the shooting.

I've watched the last few days as the student survivors have gone on national television with the kind of poise you can only dream of having and told the world that they want immediate action. They don't ever want to see another community go through what our community is going through now. They are true leaders and they WILL win this battle, and you Sen. Rubio and Gov. Scott, and any other politician who espouses inaction, will LOSE.

This is a war for the lives of our children and you are on the wrong side. Every other nation has figured this out. So will we. #DOSOMETHINGNOW

Americans increasingly unwilling to listen to experts

Americans increasingly deride experts, and reject expert advice because we equate expertise with elitism and snobbery. And yet we're lucky to live among them, even if we only tend to appreciate their advice when something goes wrong, at which point we have no choice but to depend on their knowledge.

The day after Christmas, I was standing in the rubble of what had once been my family room, looking up through a burned hole in the ceiling into my living room. I was in shock, as people always are after a traumatic event like the house fire that had driven me from my home, along with my wife and my cat.

Around me, groups of people were talking. There were firefighters, building inspectors, an electrician, a plumber, a contractor, even the town administrator. All of these professionals were speaking to each other about the damage and what needed to be done.

I didn't understand a word of it.

I felt completely helpless. I have a doctorate in international relations. I have written several books. My advice has been sought by politicians, government agencies, private industry and the media. I am a veteran teacher with awards for the quality of my instruction.

None of that mattered as I stood there, a ridiculous figure with my unwashed mop of hair, some sweat pants tucked into unlaced boots, shivering in a T-shirt under my heavy coat as the temperature plummeted and the acrid stink of smoke seeped into my clothes.

Mostly, I was in the way. At one point, one of the workers gently moved me a few feet away from the damage, because the remains of the fireplace and chimney I was gawking at might collapse on my head.

That's when I realized I was in the care of experts who were as good at their jobs as I was at mine. The plumber made sure the pipes were safe. The electrician made sure there was enough power to keep some heaters on in the face of a deep freeze, and then confidently dove into a tangle of burned wires I was certain no human being could fix. (I would rather have been looking at an ICBM. At least I know how those work.)

My house swarmed with people doing what they do best. More carpenters and electricians. Painters, a stonemason, debris removal specialists. They communicated fluently with each other in the language of house repair.

Most of them were happy to explain to me what they were doing, and I did my best to learn as much as I could. But sometimes, I was just lost. When a master electrician told me why my new outlets were safer than the old ones, I nodded politely until a nearby contractor overheard us and realized I couldn't keep up. They dumbed it down for me.

Each expert relied on another's set of skills: The plumber and the electrician worked together to get the heat back on, while the carpenters and the mason made sure the new fireplace would hold. It was an ongoing illustration of the division of labor.

One day, towards the end of the repairs, one of the painters asked me my preference about something that I didn't understand. "Jim," I laughed, "if you want to know about nuclear weapons, I'm your man. If you're asking me about primers, I have no idea what you're talking about."

The painter chuckled, and then told me what he was going to do with my walls. Then he asked: "So ... what's going to happen with this thing with North Korea?"

For once I didn't feel bewildered. I gave him my best guess about how things might play out, trying to muster my skills as a teacher. He nodded, and went back to painting.

Asking questions of experts, whether painters or political scientists, is how we learn from each other. Most experts are happy to share their knowledge—if they're asked by people who care about the answers.

But too many Americans are unwilling to ask useful questions, or they resist answers that conflict with their preconceptions. They prefer instead to express strong views on anything from vaccines to foreign policy even if they lack basic knowledge about those subjects. Over half of the American public would support attacking North Korea; only about a third can even find it on a map. Similarly, a 2014 poll found that Americans who support U.S. military intervention in Ukraine are among the least likely to know where it is.

We will never know why the fireplace that started the fire was constructed so poorly. Over a half-century ago, someone who was supposed to be an expert either made a mistake, or cut a corner. Or maybe he just wasn't good at his job, and I was the last one to know it.

But when that one long-ago mistake nearly cost me everything, I was glad to be in the hands of people who were no less expert at their work than I am at mine. However satisfying it might be on occasion to hiss at "experts," none of us can live without them.

Physicians sue over monopolistic ‘Maintenance of Certification’

Before 1990, American physicians who had completed three years or more of rigorous training in a specialty and passed an examination were awarded lifetime “board certification.” The only exception was the family practice board, which has always issued only time-limited certificates. After 1990, all member boards of the American Board of Medical Specialties followed suit and the nightmare of Maintenance of Certification began for all board-certified physicians. This has proven to be a $230-million windfall for the administrators of these boards. Strangely, any physician who was board-certified before 1990 was “grandfathered,” exempt from this onerous requirement.

To continue to say they are board-certified, younger doctors must take the board exam over and over again, spending thousands of dollars for the review courses and the examination, and hundreds of hours away from patients and family. There are also now “practice modules” in which the boards’ chosen experts try to dictate patient care. It is claimed to be “voluntary,” but what if doctors elect not to do it?

My husband, John Eck, M.D., is a great doctor with unusual training and experience. But he is no longer allowed to practice at the hospital where he served for 26 years. He was board-certified in family medicine, and I in internal medicine.

In 1980, John’s general surgery program had a “pyramid” system. Each year, it started with 12 residents and narrowed down to four by the third year. Since John was in that group of four, his path to becoming a general surgeon seemed clear. In fact, he scored the highest grade among the four on his third-year surgery exam. But as he was finishing that third of the five-year program, John was told his contract would not be renewed. As he found out later, his spot was taken by the son of a well-connected professor.

We had a growing family and needed income, so he went to nearby Somerset Medical Center and worked as an assistant surgeon for several years. He assisted in all areas—orthopedics, neurosurgery, thoracic, and abdominal surgery. He had to dash into the hospital at all hours of the night to do emergency C-sections. He loved it but realized it would best to become board-certified in something. He chose family medicine, a field that suited him well. He was given only three months credit in the three-year family medicine program for his three years of surgical training, but swallowed his pride, excelled in the program, and became an extraordinarily well-rounded physician. Some of his family medicine professors had been his medical students while he was a surgical resident, and his knowledge was so valued that he was asked to teach students again. No one ever questioned his ability.

I became board-certified for life in internal medicine in 1985 and was thus “grandfathered,” never having to participate in MOC.

In 1988, we started a multi-specialty private medical practice near where we had trained. Feeling as though he had been educated to the hilt with six years of formal post-medical school training, John never retok the family medicine boards. No one seemed to mind. Expending the time away from his practice and family seemed wasteful and costly. He never failed to keep up with continuing medical education as required for continued licensure. Our practice grew, and our patients were very loyal.

Around 2010, when he was renewing his Somerset Medical Center staff privileges, a secretary noticed that he had never recertified in family medicine. He argued that 26 years of an unblemished record, getting 50 credits of CME per year, and having no patient complaints should be enough to have his privileges continued. But the medical staff bylaws required “board certification,” and his had expired. They refused to make an exception as most hospitals did.

As of 2011, John was no longer allowed to admit and care for his hospitalized patients. Some of his patients were heartbroken, as his skill and confident demeanor gave them comfort when they needed him to care for them in the hospital. One patient with a pneumothorax requiring a chest tube would have greatly benefitted from his management skills. I argued that he should at least be allowed to be my “physician’s assistant,” but this logic was not welcomed.

The Association of American Physicians and Surgeons has filed a lawsuit against ABMS, and JE is the cited example of the unthinking, abusive, and illogical requirement of MOC for physicians to serve their hospitalized patients or have their services covered by insurance. Why should the self-selected experts of ABMS have the sole authority to “certify” physician competence and deny patients access to their chosen doctor?

Poetic Penance on Presidential Politics

I’m Not Giving Up Trump for Lent

Satiric sonnets about Pres. 45 are time well spent in fact they provide me with a sort of catharsis so I’m not giving up writing about Trump for Lent and will monitor his malignant metamorphosis

Its like the child who loves candy and cookies but says he’ll give up licorice and fruit cake since he never eats either one of these and wants to continue his sweet tooth intake

We have all done it from time to time giving up something we don’t care about as a poet I enjoy writing words that rhyme Donald Trump is a perfect target no doubt

I’ll continue dealing in derision during Lent about the tragic times of our 45th US president.

Days of Wrath Mueller on the Warpath

Latin language leads the way deconstructing the Dies Irae 45 says he’ll meet Mueller, promises an oath he’ll be taking “Quantus tremor est futurus”- How great will be the quaking How many careers thrown under the bus?

“Quando judex est venturus”- When the judge will come Will Trump not remember and play dumb?

“Cuncta stricte discussurus”- Investigating everything strictly Mueller wants questions answered explicitly and specifically “Judex ergo cum sedebit” - When therefore the Judge will sit guarantee he won’t put up with 45’s bulls...

“Quidquid latet apparebit” - Whatever lies hidden will appear and 45 won’t be grinning from ear to ear

“Nil inultum remanebit”- nothing will remain unpunished and Mueller is nowhere near finished.

We won’t be great, America, until we realize we’re not

By BILLY MADDALON

THE CHARLOTTE OBSERVER

Please don’t read this if you think reality sucks. You won’t enjoy it.

Our history books teach us America was once the best in the world at virtually everything. True or not, we have always clung to a belief in “American exceptionalism”—that we’re different, better, smarter, because God wants it to be that way. It’s blatant national narcissism. To seem rather than to be. And it’s slowly destroying our nation.

America’s current reality is sobering: Our expensive health system is one of the worst underperformers in the industrialized world (17th out of 37); Our education system is one of the worst (25th out of 37); Our mental health systems are fragmented and underfunded, with an opioid epidemic raging out of control in our rural communities. We also are the most violent country in the industrialized world (with gun homicide rates that are 25 times higher than our peers).

Gun violence has become a metaphor, a symptom of a much more insidious problem. We’ve somehow convinced ourselves that this, like so many other issues, is just going to magically go away, that the gun violence on our streets and mass shootings in houses of worship, night clubs, theaters, universities, schools and malls is just some kind of phase we’re going through.

All of these problems persist because we refuse to learn from what other countries have done to solve these same challenges.

Remember, we’re different, better, smarter, we’re exceptional. Screw the facts!

I’ve taught my children magic isn’t real. I assure them we won’t get magically better at anything. Only hard work and doing whatever is required makes things better. Reality, choices, hard work, all once bedrock American core values, have now been replaced by ideology, wishful thinking and hope.

Our nation has perfected the art of making excuses. Take the gun debate. Americans have more guns per capita than any other country and own nearly half of the guns in the entire world, even though we’re only 5 percent of the population. Neither is necessarily a bad thing. Except then there’s also that pesky fact about being, by far, the most violent country in the world, with 33,000 Americans killed by guns every year. Cause and effect? Nah, it’s just a coincidence. Ignore the man behind the curtain. We got this.

Study after study has revealed that gun violence directly correlates with levels of education, poverty and access. And the small subset of mass shootings directly correlates with mental illness, isolation, despair and, you guessed it, access. Take it from someone who does “angry-young-man-with-low-self-esteem-and-mental-illness” for a living. We’ve parented 19 foster children, all of whom are poor, struggled with depression and despair and all of whom take powerful psychotropic medication. Seventeen of them would pass a background check and have legal access to guns. Do I have your attention now?

Unless our nation does something to fix what’s broken, it won’t magically go away. Our problems will continue to get worse unless the American people and our government acknowledge that we have serious structural, societal, socio-economic and regulatory problems.

We aren’t what we claim to be nor what we all hoped we were. We have to confront the brutal facts. Until we do, “Make America Great Again” will just be synonymous with “Make America Bleed Again.”

Western North Pacific between equator and 25N from 130E to 180.

A few changes made to the forecast. Did update winds with new model data. Models seem to be predicting winds higher than what observations currently show. Model data would suggest winds at or above 20 mph over the Marianas. Scatterometer data from last night did not show this high of wind speeds and depicted weather patterns would suggest little change today. Did low model winds and kept winds to between 15 and 20 mph. Clouds associated with the weak shear line has dissipated drier air filtering into the area will keep skies partly cloudy today and tonight. Trade-wind convergence will produce a return to mostly cloudy skies Thursday, which will continue through Thursday night. Deep layer moisture will be lacking so showers will remain isolated the next few days.

Tinian Hot Pepper Festival just keeps growing

The 14th Annual Tinian Hot Pepper Festival held last weekend shows the event continues to grow in activities and participation.

The festival highlighted Tinian's famously potent donni sali pepper and was held at Tachogna Beach. With inter-island transportation provided by added commuter flights, a ferry, and traditional sailing canoe, along with a shuttle from the ports to the festival grounds, visitors found it easier than ever to participate in the event.

"Through the continued strong partnership of the Marianas Visitors Authority, Tinian Mayor's Office, Tinian Municipal Council, and the community, this year's festival was better than ever," said MVA managing director Christopher A. Concepcion. "In particular, we thank this year's Extreme Pika sponsors, Bridge Investment Group and IT&E, for providing the financial and in-kind support that allowed us to expand the event, offer great cash and phone prizes, and share the festival worldwide via on-site WiFi access."

Cory San Nicholas and Tina San Nicholas were crowned Hot Pepper Eating Contest king and queen for the men and women contests, respectively. Each were the first to polish off three pieces of mild peppers, followed by two pieces of hot donni sali, and topped by a bowl of soba with two tablespoons of ground donni sali mixed in.

In the JC Café Burger Eating Contest, Byron Dela Cruz was the first to finish a one-pound hamburger pasted with ground donni and a side of fries sprinkled with donni powder.

For the first time, arm-wrestling was introduced to the festival lineup of contests. Alex Harris of Georgia good-naturedly agreed to use his left arm against southpaw Tinian native Dennis Borja. The title ultimately went to Benjamin Borja, who towered over both his opponents.

An outrigger canoe race pitted four teams against each other in the warm, turquoise water of Tachogna Beach. Pika Punket Pie was making good time until the canoe capsized when rounding the turn buoy. With the Department of Public Safety Boating Safety Division also nearby, Tinian Sen. Jude Hofschneider mounted a rescue party in a spare canoe when Pika Punket Pie filled with water due to a faulty plug and could not be flipped upright to finish the race. Despite this unfortunate "turn" of events, the Pika Punket Pie crew cheered on the other teams from shore, with last year's winner JC Café Team eventually recapturing their title.

The shade of pine trees framed Pika Pika in their beach volleyball win over High Flyers, while JM Pika House presented the best entry in the Booth Decorating Contest.

For the children, a large but late-starting crab won Anita Cameron top place in the umang (hermit crab) race for girls, while Branden Cepeda's entry won the boys' race. A co-ed sack race saw boys and girls jumping—in one case, tumbling—their way to the finish line.

Tug-of-war provided to be a crowd favorite for the weekend. As grounds crew watered down the dirt turned dusty by the tropical heat, three teams of boys prepared themselves. The first team of obviously younger boys put up a brave effort against their stronger opponent. In round two, another group of boys put up an unexpectedly strong fight before eventually succumbing to the champions. Later, the men took the rope for a strength struggle.

The road/off road 65K Pika Bike Race at 6am on Saturday morning attracted 26 riders, many of who brought their bikes over via ferry the prior day.

"By all accounts, this year's Tinian Hot Pepper Festival was a success. Even the weather was perfect!" said MVA Community Projects manager Martin Duenas. "We look forward to welcoming even more visitors in 2019."

The Tinian Hot Pepper Festival is held every President's Day weekend on the island of Tinian, accessible from Saipan in 10 minutes via commuter flight. (MVA)

Trump urges ban on gun devices like bump stocks

WASHINGTON (AP)—As a grieving Florida community demanded action on guns, President Donald Trump on Tuesday directed the Justice Department to move to ban devices like the rapid-fire bump stocks used in last year's Las Vegas massacre. It was a small sign of movement on the gun violence issue that has long tied Washington in knots.

"We must do more to protect our children," Trump said, adding that his administration was working hard to respond to the shooting in Parkland that left 17 dead.

After past mass killings yielded little action on tighter gun controls, the White House is trying to demonstrate that it is taking the issue seriously. The president, a strong and vocal supporter of gun rights, has not endorsed more robust changes sought by gun control activists. But the White House cast the president in recent days as having been swayed by the school shooting in Florida and willing to listen to proposals.

In a tweet Tuesday night, Trump indicated he wants to strengthen the background check system, but offered no specifics.

Trump said: "Whether we are Republican or Democrat, we must now focus on strengthening Background Checks!"

Asked at a press briefing Tuesday if Trump was open to reinstating a ban on assault-type weapons, spokeswoman Sarah Huckabee Sanders said White House officials "haven't closed the door on any front." She also said that the idea of raising the age limit to buy an AR-15 was "on the table for us to discuss."

Sen. Chris Murphy, a Connecticut Democrat and leading advocate for tighter gun controls, said Trump's directive suggested the president was aware of fresh energy on the issue and called it a sign that "for the first time" politicians are "scared of the political consequences of inaction on guns."

A bipartisan legislative effort to ban bump stocks last year fizzled out. The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives announced in December that it was reviewing whether weapons using bump stocks should be considered illegal machine guns under federal law.

Under the Obama administration, the ATF had concluded that bump stocks did not violate federal law. But the acting director of the ATF told lawmakers in December that the ATF and Justice Department would not have initiated the review if a ban "wasn't a possibility at the end."

The Justice Department had not made any announcement regarding its review when Trump on Tuesday signed a memorandum directing the agency to complete the review as soon as possible and propose a rule "banning all devices that turn legal weapons into machine guns."

Reacting to Trump's memo, the department said in a statement that it "understands this is a priority for the president and has acted quickly to move through the rulemaking process. We look forward to the results of that process as soon as it is duly completed."

A day earlier, Trump sent another signal he had been swayed by the Parkland shooting and the dramatic calls for action in its aftermath. A White House statement said Trump was looking at a bill that would strengthen federal gun background checks. On Wednesday, he will host parents, teachers and students at the White House for a "listening session" that will include people impacted by mass shootings in Parkland, Columbine, Colorado and Newtown, Connecticut.

The president was moved by a visit Friday with Florida victims in the hospital and is trying to work on solutions, said a person familiar with his thinking who sought anonymity to discuss internal conversations.

Investors are winners as companies lay out tax-saving plans

NEW YORK (AP)—It's just what the GOP said we'd hear from a CEO after being handed a big tax break.

But when Charles Scharf announced plans last month to spend his company's tax savings on higher wages and technology, investors began selling.

The Bank of New York Mellon CEO said he had a responsibility to "share the benefit" with workers and build the "company of the future." But investors want to share in the tax bounty as well—through higher dividends and buybacks. By the end of the day, the bank's stock was down 4.4 percent.

The biggest tax rewrite in three decades was sold by its Republican backers as a way to help American workers, and there have been plenty of announcements about bonuses and plans to buy equipment and make other capital investments to improve productivity and raise wages. But much more money has been earmarked for dividends and buybacks.

Retailer Lowe's has authorized $7.1 billion in buybacks, triple the level planned before the tax overhaul. Radio giant Sirius XM has increased its program by a fifth to $12 billion. And Wednesday Cisco announced the biggest number of all—a $25 billion increase to its repurchase program.

Buybacks, in which companies purchase their own shares and retire them, are popular with investors because fewer shares outstanding lifts earnings per share, the most watched barometer of corporate success.

A recent survey by Morgan Stanley showed Wall Street stock analysts expect companies to allocate 43 percent of tax savings to dividends and buybacks. Capital spending and workers will get 17 percent and 13 percent, respectively.

The flood of buybacks could help drive stocks higher during a touchy moment in the market. They've played that role before in the nine-year bull market, as companies step in to lift share prices at crucial moments when traditional buyers like insurers and individual investors turned to sellers.

But critics note that stocks now are more expensive relative to long-term earnings than at any time since the dot-com boom and that the money might be wasted if stocks drop anyway. They also argue that money used for buybacks—trillions of dollars in recent years—is often better spent on improving operations and making workers more productive, which can lead to "real" wage increases that do more than just keep up with inflation.

"What are you getting from buying back stock? It doesn't generate any growth, any real activity," said James Abate, chief investment officer of Centre Asset Management.

To be sure, the tax overhaul isn't all about buybacks and may end up helping workers, too. The conservative Americans for Tax Reform has been touting its tally of three million workers promised bonuses and other compensation gains so far, a number cited by President Donald Trump in his State of the Union address. That's welcome news given the slow growth in wages in recent years.

Florida survivors, lawmakers on collision course over guns

PARKLAND, Fla. (AP)—Students who survived the Florida school shooting began a journey Tuesday to the state Capitol to urge lawmakers to prevent another massacre, but within hours the gun-friendly Legislature had effectively halted any possibility of banning assault-style rifles like the one used in the attack.

The legislative action further energized the teens as they prepared to confront legislators who have quashed gun-control efforts for decades in a state where 1.3 million people have concealed carry permits.

"They're voting to have shootings continually happen. These people who voted down the bill haven't experienced what we did. I want to say to them, 'It could be you,'" 16-year-old Noah Kaufman said as he made the 400-mile (640-kilometer) trip to Tallahassee.

Three buses carried 100 students who, in the aftermath of the attack that killed 17 people, want to revive the gun-control movement. The teens carried sleeping bags and pillows and hugged their parents as they departed, many wearing burgundy T-shirts in their school colors.

They spent the seven-hour ride checking their phones, watching videos and reading comments on social media

Most Americans want stricter laws

Americans who said they were dissatisfied with U.S. gun laws were asked: Would you like to see gun laws in this country made more strict, less strict or remain as they are?

about the shooting, some of which accused them of being liberal pawns.

About 500 Leon High School students and parents applauded as the students got off the bus from Broward County.

Stoneman Douglas senior Diego Pfeiffer thanked his Tallahassee counterparts as a group of Broward County students stood behind him on the school steps.

"This isn't about school shootings. This isn't about violence anymore. This is about hope. This is about moving forward," Pfeiffer told the crowd.

As the grieving Florida students demanded action on guns, President Donald Trump on Tuesday directed the Justice Department to move to ban devices like the rapid-fire bump stocks used in last year's Las Vegas massacre. It was a small sign of movement on the gun violence issue that has long tied Washington in knots.

"We must do more to protect our children," said Trump, a strong and vocal supporter of gun rights. He added that his administration was working hard to respond to the Florida rampage.

Meanwhile at the Florida Statehouse, a Democratic representative asked for a procedural move that would have allowed the Republican-controlled House to consider a ban on large-capacity magazines and assault-style rifles such as the AR-15 that was wielded by the suspect, Nikolas Cruz.

The bill had been assigned to three committees but was not scheduled for a hearing. The House quickly nixed the Democratic motion. The vote broke down along party lines, and Republicans criticized Democrats for forcing the vote.

Because the committees will not meet again before the legislative session ends March 9, the move essentially extinguishes hope that lawmakers would vote on any sweeping measures to restrict assault rifles, although other proposals could still be considered.

Report: Hawaii wasn't ready to handle missile threat alert

HONOLULU (AP)—Hawaii's nuclear missile scare showed that the state began testing alerts before fully developing a plan to address the ballistic missile threat and that a public outreach campaign months earlier wasn't effective, said a report released Tuesday.

The state Department of Defense, the agency that oversees Hawaii's emergency management, released the internal review after an alert was sent to cellphones, televisions and radio stations across the state last month.

The notification, which read "BALLISTIC MISSILE THREAT INBOUND TO HAWAII. SEEK IMMEDIATE SHELTER. THIS IS NOT A DRILL," triggered widespread panic as more than a million residents and visitors feared they were about to face a ballistic missile strike.

Gov. David Ige assigned Brig. Gen. Kenneth Hara, the second in command at the Department of Defense, to conduct a comprehensive review of the agency's operations.

"The response and recovery sections of the plan were minimally developed," Hara's report said. "The plan lacked clear details for sheltering, county coordination and protocols for decision to send out all clear or false missile alert messages, e.g., interception, missile impact without effect to Hawaii, etc."

The public didn't get adequate directions about what to do, the report said.

An agency employee mistakenly sent the alert to cellphones and broadcast stations across the state during a shift-change drill at the agency on Jan. 13.

Officials later disclosed the employee didn't think he and his colleagues were participating in a drill and instead believed a real attack was imminent. The state has since fired him.

State officials said the worker, who had been employed at the agency for 11 years, had mistakenly believed two prior drills—for tsunami and fire warnings—were actual events. His supervisors counseled him but kept him for a decade in a position that had to be renewed each year.

The ex-worker disputed that, saying he wasn't aware of any performance problems. The employee, who spoke on condition of anonymity because he feared for his safety after receiving death threats, told reporters that he was devastated about causing panic but was "100 percent sure" at the time that the attack was real.

ASIAN BRIEFS

Rights groups want probe of civilians held by Myanmar army

BANGKOK (AP)—Rights groups are urging authorities in Myanmar to investigate and release information about two ethnic Kachin civilians believed to be held by soldiers in the country's north, where fighting has raged between government forces and armed Kachin rebels. Fortify Rights, a Southeast Asia-focused human rights group, urged Myanmar officials on Tuesday to urgently account for the two Kachin civilians, who were reportedly taken almost three weeks ago from a camp for the internally displaced in Kachin state's Mai Hkawng village. The seizure of civilians in ethnic minority regions by Myanmar's army is not rare. Rights groups say they are usually taken by troops who accuse them of having a connection to armed rebel groups.

Japan sees transfer at sea that may violate NKorea sanctions

TOKYO (AP)—Japan says its military has witnessed a ship-to-ship transfer on the high seas that it "strongly suspects" violates U.N. sanctions on North Korea. The Foreign Ministry said late Tuesday that a surveillance plane and an escort ship saw a North Korean-flagged tanker alongside a smaller ship about 250 kilometers (150 miles) off Shanghai in the East China Sea. The Feb. 16 sighting was the third one reported by Japan in the past month. The Foreign Ministry said Japan had notified the U.N. Security Council of the transfer. The U.N. has toughened sanctions on North Korea to pressure it to give up its nuclear weapons development. Japan and the U.S. have said the sanctions must be enforced strictly to be effective.

Storm blocks road, causes other disruptions in New Zealand

WELLINGTON, New Zealand (AP)—Mudslides blocked the only road to a small New Zealand town Wednesday after a powerful Pacific storm caused disruptions across parts of the country. The 1,000 tourists and 5,000 locals in Takaka are not entirely trapped, but would have to use a boat, helicopter or small plane to leave town now or wait a week or more before the road is cleared and repaired. The storm that hit late Tuesday was the remnants of Cyclone Gita, which last week ripped through the Pacific nation of Tonga, destroying homes, churches and the historic Parliament House.

The winds weakened as the storm moved on an arc through the Pacific. But the heavy rains were enough to cause disruptions in New Zealand, although the country escaped major damage. Tasman District Mayor Richard Kempthorne said the main concern was ensuring Takaka had enough fuel and food. He said he'd been working with civil defense authorities to ensure supplies were being brought in by boat.

India arrests 11 suspects in $1.8 billion bank fraud case

NEW DELHI (AP)—India's federal investigating agency on Tuesday arrested another five executives as it swooped down on companies run by two main suspects in an alleged $1.8 billion bank fraud case that continued for six years. Central Bureau of Investigation spokesman Abhishit Dayal said the five worked for the companies owned by Nirav Modi, a billionaire jeweller, and his uncle Mehul Choksi. Their whereabouts are not known. Five bank executives and another employee of Modi's company Firestar group were arrested over the past three days for allegedly conspiring to cheat the state-owned Punjab National Bank, bringing the total number to 11, the spokesman said. Modi allegedly cheated the bank by using fake bank "letters of understanding" to get loans. Most of the letters were sent to overseas offices of Indian banks, which made the actual loans, said Sunil Mehta, Punjab National Bank's managing director. India's Finance Minister Arun Jaitley on Tuesday blamed bank management and auditors.

Japanese man given custody of 13 surrogate kids

BANGKOK (AP)—A Thai court on Tuesday granted legal custody of 13 babies carried by surrogate mothers to a secretive Japanese millionaire who is their biological father, reviving a bizarre tale that captured tabloid headlines four years ago, but leaving some basic questions unanswered. Mitsutoki Shigeta's case raised eyebrows in 2014 when police raided a Bangkok condominium and found nine babies and nine nannies living in unfurnished rooms. It was determined that Shigeta had fathered the children using Thai surrogate mothers. The case, along with several others, helped usher in a Thai law prohibiting commercial surrogacy for foreign clients. Bangkok's Central Juvenile and Family Court gave Shigeta sole legal custody of the children, ruling that he is financially stable and had showed his plans to care for them. The ruling said Shigeta had a right to custody because the children were born before the new law was enacted, and because the surrogate mothers signed documents waiving their custody rights. Shigeta, who has kept an extremely low profile, did not attend the court's sessions and had a lawyer represent him. Shigeta is the son of an owner of a Japanese company and earns over 100 million baht ($3.1 million) in annual dividends, which shows he is financially capable of looking after the children, the court said in a statement. He is now 28 years old, according to a copy of his passport released by Thai police in 2014.

Australia helps Indian Ocean neighbors enhance rescue skills

CANBERRA, Australia (AP)—Australian authorities say they have helped make the Indian Ocean safer for air and sea travelers since the Malaysian airliner vanished in the vast expanse four years ago through search and rescue training with island nations. Search and rescue officials from Mauritius, Maldives and Sri Lanka are visiting the Australian Maritime Safety Authority headquarters in Canberra this week as part of a regional training program that began in 2015. Rick Allen, an Australian search and rescue coordinator who is taking part in the training, said five Sri Lankan fishermen were rescued faster and more efficiently after their boat sank in 2016 thanks to the three countries having an Australian online broadcast system to alert merchant shipping to emergencies. "We're all about strengthening the response options that are available in search and rescue. We're particularly dealing in that remote northwestern part of the Indian Ocean," Allen said. "Already we're seeing benefits. So the program not only involved work-shopping, meeting together, it also involved delivering systems and delivering tool that enable our partners to work more effectively in search and rescue," he added. Australia has developed particular expertise in search and rescue operations that test the limits of the distances that search planes can stay airborne. Because of Australia's isolation, the nation of just 24 million people has search and rescue responsibility for around 10 percent of the Earth's surface.

Govt bombing of Damascus suburbs kills more than 100

BEIRUT (AP)—Government forces bombed the north-eastern suburbs of the Syrian capital for a second straight day on Tuesday, killing more than 100 people and raising the specter of a full-scale offensive that could spell catastrophe for the nearly 400,000 residents trapped under siege.

Rescuers raced to reach survivors in the devastated Damascus suburbs known as eastern Ghouta as warplanes and helicopter gunships circled overhead, bombing hospitals, apartment blocks, markets and other civilian targets. The suburbs are the last major stronghold for rebels in the capital region.

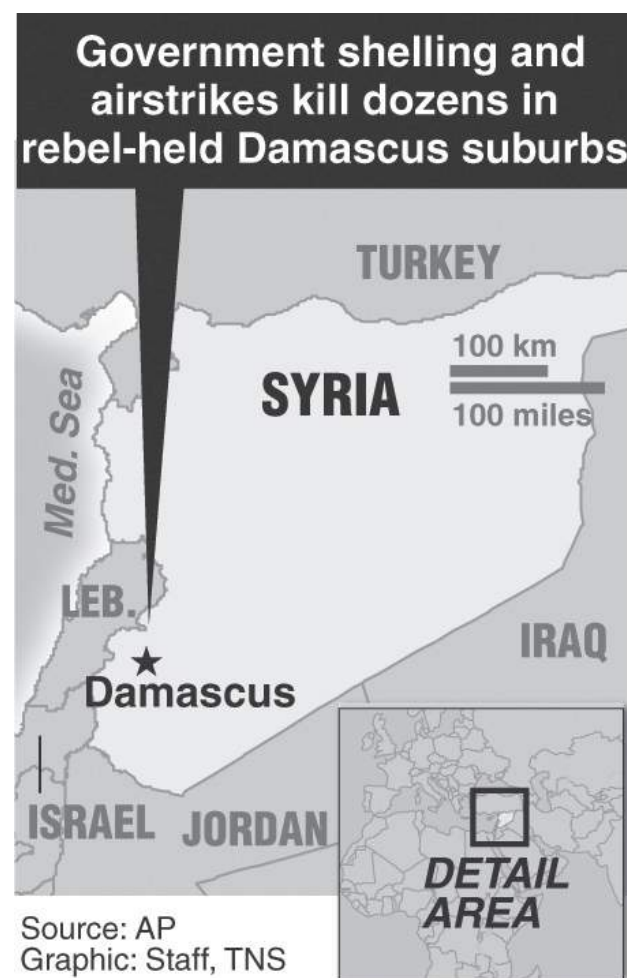

At least 250 civilians were killed during the 48 hours of unrelenting onslaught that began Monday, including 58 children, according to the Syrian Observatory for Human Rights monitoring group. Another 1,000 people were wounded, it said.

"We no longer have the words to describe children's suffering and our outrage," the U.N. children's agency said in a terse statement about the carnage.

Russian Foreign Minister Sergey Lavrov appeared to endorse the unrestrained assault, which he said was backed by the Russian air force. "In keeping with the existing agreements, the fight against terrorism cannot be restricted by anything," he said.

Russia has been an unwavering ally of Syrian President Bashar Assad's forces and was instrumental to the all-out assault in late 2016 that ejected rebels from their enclave in eastern Aleppo, Syria's largest city before the war—an outcome that Lavrov said could serve as a model for eastern Ghouta.

Pro-government forces have been amassing since the weekend on the perimeter of the rebel-held region, a collection of towns and farmland that once provided grain and fruit to the capital before nearly five years of warfare turned it into a landscape of havoc and despair.

The towns of eastern Ghouta were among the first to organize into self-governing collectives and shake off government rule after popular demonstrations against Assad swept through the country in 2011, eventually leading to civil war. They are also among the last to resist Assad's determined campaign to bring every last rebellious corner of the country to heel. Assad and his allies maintain they are fighting a war on terrorism.

Monther Fares, spokesman for the Ahrar al-Sham rebel faction operating in eastern Ghouta, said densely populated residential areas were bearing the brunt of the attacks, a hallmark tactic of the government and its allies to devastate civilian areas and infrastructure before launching a final ground assault.

The battle for rebel-held east Aleppo culminated in the evacuation of tens of thousands of civilians from their homes, with many unable to return. A subsequent U.N. investigation charged that the campaign amounted to forced displacement of a population and rose to the level of a war crime.

That outcome could still be a while coming in eastern Ghouta, which is considerably larger than east Aleppo.

It is also divided between two rebel factions that deeply distrust each other, as well as a small presence of al-Qaida-linked fighters and a handful of other militias that could lead to the fragmentation of the enclave, according to Aron Lund, a fellow at the New York-based Century Foundation. That, at least, could spare civilians some of the devastation of an all-out ground assault.

Ukraine's president signs bill on Russia-backed regions

KIEV, Ukraine (AP)—Ukrainian President Petro Poroshenko has signed a bill aimed at reintegrating the territory in the country's east controlled by Russia-backed separatists.

The bill passed last month designates the areas in the Donetsk and Luhansk regions as "temporarily occupied" by "aggressor country" Russia. It envisages the use of military force to get them back under Ukraine's control.

The conflict in the east erupted after Russia's annexation of Crimea and has killed more than 10,000 since April 2014. A 2015 peace agreement signed in Minsk has helped reduce hostilities, but clashes continue.

The bill signed Tuesday contains no reference to the Minsk deal brokered by France and Germany that obliged Ukraine to pass legislation offering broad autonomy to the separatist regions and amnesty to rebels. Most Ukrainian political forces reject that.

Mass shooters use loopholes, lapses in checks to get guns

By MICHAEL R. SISAK
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Nikolas Cruz is just the latest U.S. mass shooter to legally obtain and own guns because of limited firearms laws, lapses in the background check process or law enforcement's failure to heed warnings of concerning behavior.

The 19-year-old had made threats and was expelled from school, bragged about killing animals, posed with guns on social media and went to a clinic for mental health treatment before took an AR-15-style rifle he had bought legally to a Florida high school and killed 17 people.

The same style weapon has been used in Sutherland Springs, Texas; Las Vegas; San Bernardino, California; and Newtown, Connecticut. A similar rifle was used in Orlando.

President Donald Trump kept a loophole allowing people to obtain guns while undergoing mental health treatment that President Barack Obama had tried to close. Other mass shooters have gotten around restrictions by using weapons initially purchased legally.

A look at some recent mass shootings, the number of deaths and how the attackers obtained their guns:

PARKLAND, FLORIDA: FEB. 14, 2018. 17 DEAD

Cruz legally purchased a Smith & Wesson M&P 15 rifle in February 2017 from a licensed gun store located about 3 miles (5 kilometers) from the school, law enforcement officials said.

Cruz had gone to a mental health clinic for treatment but hadn't been there in more than a year, Broward County Mayor Beam Furr said. Under federal law, gun purchases can only be blocked if a person is legally declared a "mental defective" or committed to a mental institution.

If Cruz wanted a handgun, however, the sale wouldn't have been allowed. Federal allows people as young as 18 to buy semi-automatic weapons from licensed dealers. Handgun purchases are restricted to 21 and older.

Cruz had his gun for about seven months when he commented on YouTube that he was "going to be a professional school shooter." The FBI said it investigated but was unable to identify the person who posted the comment.

In January, the FBI received a tip from someone who said Cruz had expressed a desire to kill people, was making disturbing social media posts and could potentially commit a school shooting.

The agency failed to follow protocols and no further investigation was conducted.

SUTHERLAND SPRINGS, TEXAS: NOV. 5, 2017. 25 DEAD

Devin Patrick Kelley's history of domestic abuse barred him from legally buying guns, but he did so anyway because information about his crimes was never entered into a federal database used for background checks.

Kelley purchased four guns, including the AR-15-style rifle and handguns found in and near First Baptist Church, from licensed dealers in Texas and Colorado over a four-year span.

The 26-year-old passed required background checks because the Air Force never informed the FBI about his criminal conduct - an assault on his wife and her child that led to a court-martial, a year of confinement and a bad conduct discharge.

Military rules require that the information be shared.

A 1996 law bans people convicted of even a misdemeanor-level domestic violence offense from owning guns. Kelley was convicted at a court-martial for choking his then-wife and fracturing her son's skull in 2012.

LAS VEGAS: OCT. 1, 2017. 58 DEAD

Stephen Paddock amassed the bulk of his arsenal over the span of a year, culminating with a purchase three days before he holed up in the Mandalay Bay hotel and opened fire on a country music festival below.

Paddock purchased 33 of the 49 weapons found in the hotel room and at his homes between October 2016 and Sept. 28, 2017, according to the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives.

None of the purchases drew scrutiny because the 64-year-old Paddock passed all background checks. His gradual accumulation of weapons went undetected because federal law does not require licensed gun dealers to alert the government about rifle purchases.

Twelve of the semi-automatic rifles recovered by authorities were equipped with bump stocks, a device that allows them to fire repeatedly without pulling the trigger over and over.

ORLANDO, FLORIDA: JUNE 12, 2016. 49 DEAD

Omar Mateen purchased an AR-15-style rifle, a Sig Sauer MCX, and a handgun on separate days about a week before the attack from a licensed dealer near his home in Fort Pierce, Florida. The 29-year-old passed a background check and had two security licenses, one of which allowed him to be armed while on duty.

The FBI investigated Mateen in 2013 and 2014 after co-workers shared concerns about statements he had made concerning possible ties to terrorist groups. Neither inquiry led to criminal charges. Even if he had been placed on a terrorism watch list, Congress in 2015 rejected attempts to prevent people on the list from purchasing guns.

SAN BERNARDINO, CALIFORNIA: DEC. 2, 2015. 14 DEAD

Syed Farook and his wife used weapons that the FBI said were legally purchased by his neighbor, Enrique Marquez, from a licensed dealer in 2011 and 2012. Marquez, who pleaded guilty to charges he conspired to provide support to terrorists and made false statements to acquire a firearm, told investigators that Farook asked him to buy the weapons because he would draw less attention. At the time, the FBI said, the men were plotting to shoot up a community college and a highway.

ROSEBURG, OREGON: OCT. 1, 2015. 10 DEAD

Christopher Harper-Mercer and his family members legally purchased the handguns and rifle he used in the Umpqua Community College shooting from a federally licensed gun dealer, according to the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives.

CHARLESTON, SOUTH CAROLINA: JUNE 17, 2015. 9 DEAD

A drug arrest should have prevented Dylann Roof from purchasing the pistol authorities said he used at Emanuel AME Church, but a record-keeping error and background check delay allowed the transaction to go through. The FBI said a background check examiner never saw the arrest report because the wrong arresting agency was listed in state criminal history records. After three days, the gun dealer was legally permitted to complete the transaction.

WASHINGTON, D.C.: SEPT. 16, 2013. 12 DEAD

Aaron Alexis, a former reservist turned civilian contractor, passed state and federal background checks and legally purchased the pump-action shotgun used in the Washington Navy Yard shooting despite a history of violent outbursts and recent mental health treatment. Alexis was accused of firing a gun in anger in Texas in 2004 and in Seattle in 2010 but was not prosecuted in either case. In 2011, he received an honorable discharge despite bouts of insubordination, disorderly conduct and unauthorized absences. None of that would have disqualified him from purchasing a weapon.

NEWTOWN, CONNECTICUT: DEC. 14, 2012. 26 DEAD

Adam Lanza used his mother's weapons, including a .223-caliber semi-automatic rifle, in the massacre at Sandy Hook Elementary School. Lanza's mother, whom he fatally shot before going to the school, also purchased the ammunition, investigators said.

AURORA, COLORADO: JULY 20, 2012. 12 DEAD

James Holmes was receiving psychiatric treatment when he passed required federal background checks and legally purchased the weapons he used in his movie theater assault. As in the Parkland and Navy Yard cases, treatment alone did not prevent him from buying guns.

AP reporters Kelli Kennedy in Parkland, Florida, Michael Balsamo in Los Angeles and Sadie Gurman in Washington contributed to this report.

Some fear California drought cuts could erase water rights

In this July 8, 2014 file photo, a sign alerts visitors to water conservation efforts is displayed on a parched lawn at the state Capitol in Sacramento, Calif. Members of the state Water Resources Control Board delayed a decision about whether to bring back what had been temporary water bans from California's historic, five-year drought, Tuesday, Feb. 20, 2018.

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP)—A proposal to make California's drought-era water restrictions permanent could allow the state to chip away at long-held water rights in an unprecedented power grab, representatives from water districts and other users told regulators Tuesday.

Members of the state Water Resources Control Board delayed a decision about whether to bring back what had been temporary water bans from California's drought, spanning 2013 to 2017. The plan is part of an effort to make water conservation a way of life, with climate change expected to lead to longer, more severe droughts.

It comes after U.S. officials declared that nearly half the state, all of it in the south, is back in drought just months after emerging from it.

Officials from several irrigation and water agencies said the restrictions are reasonable, but not the plan to impose them under the state Constitution's prohibition on the "waste or unreasonable use" of water. That would create a slippery slope of allowing the board to repeatedly chip away at California's historic protection of water rights for landowners, they said.

"Erratic individuals can occupy great positions of power in government, and you had better believe they will occupy your chair someday," said Jackson Minasian, an attorney for Stanford Vina Ranch Irrigation Co. "Their view of what is 'waste and unreasonable use' will be radically different than yours."

Some water users also said permanent mandates would be too rigid in a sprawling state with needs that vary by region.

The restrictions, punishable by a $500 fine, include prohibitions on watering lawns so much that the water flows into the street, using a hose to wash down sidewalks or using a hose without an automatic shut-off nozzle to wash cars. A final decision is now expected by April 17.

Hotels would have to ask guests if they really need their towels and sheets washed each day. Running an ornamental fountain without a recirculating system would be barred, as would watering outside within 48 hours of a good rain. Another measure would give cities and counties until 2025 to stop watering ordinary street medians.

Restaurants would be allowed to serve water only on request if the governor declares a drought emergency.

Water officials expect neighbors to be responsible for detecting and reporting most of the wasteful water use, and they have no plans to add more enforcement officers if the permanent restrictions are adopted.

Generally, first-time offenders would get warnings, while repeat offenders risk fines.

Environmental groups urged officials to crack down more aggressively on wasteful water use rather than rely on policies that encourage neighbors to develop good practices.

Water board chairwoman Felicia Marcus said the restrictions are hardly a long-term solution to California's drought problems but "the least we should do."

"We're not in an emergency right now, but shame on us if we just bury our heads in the sand ... allow people to go out and waste water by washing down the driveway with a hose when a broom would do," she said.

The plan also includes legislation that would create customized water-use limits for urban water districts, which would risk state enforcement if they fell short. Lawmakers also are considering whether to allow districts to enforce drought regulations, a power now reserved for the state.

Gov. Jerry Brown lifted California's emergency drought status a year ago, after a wet winter. Strict 25 percent conservation orders for cities and towns and other restrictions then were phased out.

Some climate scientists say the drought never fully ended in parts of Southern California. The Los Angeles area has received just a fourth of normal rainfall so far this rainy season.

In the Northern Sierra Nevada, the winter so far has been the third-driest on record for the year's wettest three months—December, January and February—produced very little rainfall, said John Leahigh of the California Department of Water Resources.

The water content of the Sierra snowpack, which feeds water supplies, is about 20 percent of normal for this time of year, he said.

Most of California's reservoirs are at or slightly above their historical average for this time of year, but experts expect that to fall when water is released in the spring and summer and not enough melting snow can replenish it.

"This is a very ugly picture in terms of the water supply management," Leahigh said.

Stars, educators lead effort for kids to see 'Black Panther'

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP)—For years, Xavier Thompson has followed Marvel superhero movies. But the 16-year-old student in Albuquerque has always wanted to see a popular film with a black superhero and black themes.

Thanks to an Albuquerque educator, the aspiring hip-hop and spoken word artist finally got his wish Thursday when he was given tickets to a private screening of "Black Panther."

"It was amazing. The music, the action...everything," said Thompson, who is black. "It made me proud to see out culture depicted like that."

"Black Panther" is about the mythical and highly advanced African nation of Wakanda, where T'Challa, played by Chadwick Boseman, inherits the throne but is challenged by a Wakandan exile named Killmonger, played by Michael B. Jordan. It's the 18th film in the Marvel Cinematic Universe and based on 50-year-old material created by Stan Lee and Jack Kirby.

The movie set a record with its $235 million debut at the top of the U.S. box office over the holiday weekend, becoming a blockbuster but also a cultural phenomenon. It's why some educators, philanthropists, celebrities, and business owners are pulling together their resources to bring children of color to see it. Elementary school students in Detroit, middle school students in Atlanta and students living Los Angeles public housing all have been surprised in recent days with free tickets and transportation to experience a movie that is captivating black communities nationwide.

While black leads in TV and film have grown over the years, there is still a lack of positive minority images coming from Hollywood, which is why many are stressing the importance of having young black kids see the movie.

"Something very special is happening here," said Joycelyn Jackson, director of the Black Student Union for Albuquerque Public Schools, the educator who helped Thompson get into the Albuquerque screening.

"Congrats to the entire #blackpanther team! Because of you, young people will finally see superheroes that look like them on the big screen," said former first lady Michelle Obama in a tweet Monday. "I loved this movie and I know it will inspire people of all backgrounds to dig deep and find the courage to be heroes of their own stories."

The movement began in January after former ESPN "SportsCenter" host Jemele Hill called out prominent Detroiters to help young children in the city get seats to see

"Black Panther."

"I wish I had time to do it myself but if there is anyone in Detroit trying to take kids in underserved communities to see 'Black Panther,' holla at me," the Detroit native wrote on Twitter.

In response to Hill's tweet, two Twitter groups announced plans to send the entire student body at University Prep Academy High School in Detroit to see it. Twitter's black employee group known as the Blackbirds and Twitter Detroit took on the costs of tickets and transportation.

Also, students of the acclaimed Ron Clark Academy in Atlanta were told in a video that went viral they were going to see "Black Panther." In the footage, the 5th-grade students are shown cheering and dancing upon hearing the news.

Anthony "Top Dawg" Tiffith, CEO of Top Dawg Entertainment, the label of Kendrick Lamar, announced that he would pay for around 1,000 South Central Los Angeles children living in public housing to see the movie (Lamar did the film's soundtrack). Oscar-winner Octavia Spencer announced plans to host a screening in Mississippi "to ensure all our brown children can see themselves as a superhero." Over the weekend, Serena Williams surprised girls in the club Black Girls Code with a private screening, which she attended. "Empire" star Jussie Smollett took to Instagram to announce he bought out two screenings in Chicago for elementary students and high school students.

George and Amal Clooney donate $500K to march against guns

NEW YORK (AP)—Actor George Clooney and his wife, Amal Clooney, are donating $500,000 to students organizing nationwide marches against gun violence, and they say they'll also attend next month's planned protests.

In a statement released Tuesday, the couple says they're inspired by the "courage and eloquence" of the survivors-turned-activists from Stoneman Douglas High School in Parkland, Florida. Seventeen people were killed at the school and others wounded when a former student went on a rampage with an assault rifle. Students are mobilizing a March 24 march in Washington and elsewhere to urge lawmakers to enact tougher gun control.

The Clooneys say they're donating the money in the names of their eight-month-old twins Ella and Alexander. The couple also says the family plans to "stand side by side" with students next month.

'Black Panther' scores record Monday

NEW YORK (AP)—With a massive $40.2 million in ticket sales Monday, "Black Panther" has set another box-office record: biggest Monday ever.

The Walt Disney Co. again raised its box-office estimates for the Marvel sensation on Tuesday. The film's updated Monday performance—$7 million higher than Disney earlier forecast—narrowly topped the previous record, set by "Star Wars: The Force Awakens" in 2015 with $40.1 million.

The higher Monday figure gives "Black Panther" the second biggest four-day weekend, behind only the $288.1 million of "The Force Awakens." With $242 million over the Presidents' Day weekend, "Black Panther" moves ahead of December's "Star Wars: The Last Jedi" in the ranks of four-day starts.

Ryan Coogler's film, starring Chadwick Boseman, is the first big-budget tent pole release featuring a nearly all-black cast. The movie's three-day gross of $201.8 million ranks fifth highest of all time, not accounting for inflation.

Internationally, "Black Panther," which cost $200 million to make, is also outperforming earlier estimates. It has made $184.6 million overseas thus far, giving it a worldwide total of $426.6 million.

Rhode Island marks 15 years since 100 killed in club fire

WEST WARWICK, R.I. (AP) — Rhode Island is marking the 15th anniversary of a nightclub fire that killed 100 people and injured more than 200 others. The Feb. 20, 2003, fire at The Station nightclub in West Warwick started when pyrotechnics for the rock band Great White set fire to flammable foam installed as soundproofing. The site of the fire is now a memorial park. On Tuesday, some survivors, victims' relatives, fire officials and fire safety advocates gathered there to discuss a new federal tax incentive meant to make it easier for small businesses to install sprinklers. Gina Russo, a fire survivor, is president of the group that built the memorial park. She says that if there had been sprinklers in the club, "life would be completely different" for many of the people gathered there.

Man convicted of stealing John Legend's bag at JFK Airport

NEW YORK (AP) — A 64-year-old man has been convicted of stealing Grammy winner John Legend's Louis Vuitton bag containing $25,000 Cartier cufflinks from an airport luggage cart in New York. District Attorney Richard Brown said Agustin Hilario was convicted on Tuesday of criminal possession of stolen property. He's accused of swiping the bag last March when it was momentarily left unattended on a luggage cart at Kennedy Airport. Hilario was identified through surveillance camera footage. Legend is a singer, songwriter, musician and actor who co-starred in the film "La La Land." Prosecutors say Legend's possessions, including the $25,000 panther-head cufflinks, were returned to him. Legend testified in court the cufflinks were given to him by his wife, model Chrissy Teigen. A message left with Hilario's attorney wasn't immediately returned.

Guess co-founder steps aside amid misconduct investigation

NEW YORK (AP)—Guess Inc. says that co-founder Paul Marciano will give up his day-to-day responsibilities at the clothing company until a sexual misconduct investigation is completed. Model and actress Kate Upton told Time magazine earlier this month that Marciano forcibly grabbed her breasts during a Guess photo shoot nearly eight years ago. She also says that he harassed her by showing up at hotels she was staying at and texting her inappropriate comments. Marciano has denied the allegations. Guess, based in Los Angeles, says that Marciano will not be paid while he steps aside. He is an executive chairman of the company's board, and is its chief creative officer. Marciano, who co-founded the brand with his brother in 1981, also owns a 17 percent stake in Guess.

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP)—Author Stephen King on Tuesday called a Maine congressman an "NRA sweetheart" for receiving thousands of dollars from the gun rights advocacy group.

King urged residents in a tweet to not vote for Republican U.S. Rep. Bruce Poliquin in November, citing his support from the National Rifle Association. The Maine-born novelist has posted several tweets about gun policy since a Florida high school shooting last week that left 17 people dead.

Poliquin adviser Brent Littlefield said the incumbent congressman is a strong Second Amendment supporter and that he will not respond directly to a "Hollywood person."

"There are literally thousands and thousands of National Rifle Association members throughout Maine," Littlefield said. "And Congressman Poliquin has been happy to have those Maine people's support. Maine has a long tradition of responsible and peaceful firearms ownership."

The New York Times has identified Poliquin as a top House recipient of NRA funding. The newspaper last fall said the association reported spending more than $200,000 to help Poliquin's political career, including $68,000 spent attacking his opponents.

Ursula K. Le Guin wins posthumous prize for essay writing

NEW YORK (AP)—The late Ursula K. Le Guin was among the recipients of literary honors presented Tuesday night by PEN America.

The science fiction/fantasy author's "No Time to Spare" won a $10,000 prize for best essay writing. Le Guin died last month at age 88 and her award was announced during a New York ceremony hosted by PEN, the literary and human rights organization.

Poet Layli Long Soldier's debut collection "Whereas" won a $75,000 award for the year's best book. Jenny Zhang's story collection "Sour Heart" received a $25,000 prize for best debut fiction and Alexis Okeowo's "A Moonless, Starless Sky: Ordinary Women and Men Fighting Extremism in Africa" won a $5,000 award given to outstanding works by "authors of color."

"This year's awardees represent the near and far corners of the literary landscape, including writers who have shattered barriers of race, class, ethnicity, geography, gender and sexual orientation to bring stories to new audiences, unlock empathy and take places of distinction within our collective canon," PEN

America Executive Director Suzanne Nossel said in a statement. "In times of challenge great literature offers a desperately needed window onto other possibilities."

Lifetime achievement awards had been previously announced and were given to Edmund White, who won the PEN/Saul Bellow Award for American fiction, and Edna O'Brien, winner of the PEN/Nabokov Award for international literature.

ART AUCTION

Christie's London auction house staff pose for photographs with Claude Monet's "Nymphs en fleur," which will feature in the upcoming May 7-11 New York sale of the collection of Peggy and David Rockefeller, at their premises in London, Tuesday, Feb. 20, 2018. The Monet is estimated to fetch $50 million-$70 million (35.7 million to 50 million pounds, 40.5 million to 56.7 million euro). The art collection amassed by billionaire David Rockefeller could raise more than $500 million for charity when it is auctioned this spring.

Message left on voicemail embarrasses bulimia patient

DEAR ABBY: My psychiatrist's office called and left a very sensitive voicemail about my bulimia on a message machine shared with other individuals. Our voicemails are sent transcribed to everyone's email accounts.

Since my complaint (which was an argument during which the nurse who left the private information hung up on me), human resources and the office manager have contacted me to try to alleviate the tension, but I have received no apology from anyone for violating HIPAA or embarrassing me. Should I throw in the towel and find a new doctor or revoke my contact information from their files? I don't know how to proceed from here.

PERSONAL TO PUBLIC

DEAR PERSONAL: If you provided a shared phone number as your point of contact, you should not have blamed the person who left the message for using it. I see no reason to change doctors, but you should definitely alter your client information so this doesn't happen in the future.

That said, does your psychiatrist know one of his/her employees hung up on you? If not, the doctor should be informed, and you should be offered an apology.

DEAR ABBY: As guardians of our 5-year-old grandson, we have been given all rights, no terms. He has a father who is "on again, off again" and makes zero financial contribution. I want to cut him off because consistency and effort are important to me, and he shows none.

My husband, on the other hand, says the boy is young, and I should give his father some time because contact once every other month is better than none at all. Our grandson enjoys him when he is here, but he doesn't miss him or ask for him once he's left. Should I allow this inconsistency and instability to continue?

PARENTS AGAIN IN CALIFORNIA

DEAR PARENTS AGAIN: I think your husband is right. While the father's presence may be sporadic, at least your grandson knows that he is cared about. As he grows older, he may or may not start asking why his dad isn't around more. Deal with it then. The boy's stability is coming from the home you and your husband are providing for him, and that should be your focus.

DEAR ABBY: I'm close to my brother and his wife. My friend "Dotty"—who is estranged from her husband—thinks my brother is hot, so when she sees him (without his wife) she greets him with a quick kiss on the lips. I have told her I don't think my sister-in-law would like it if she saw her do that.

Since then, Dotty has asked him to do repair work at her house (without pay) and he agreed because he is kindhearted.

I told her subtly that I didn't think that was a good idea. Is her behavior toward married men normal?

TOO FRIENDLY IN HAWAII

DEAR TOO FRIENDLY: It is, for a woman who is friendly, outgoing and on the prowl. You may be dropping hints about what Dotty is doing to the wrong person. The next time you talk to your brother, tell HIM what you think about your friend's behavior, and ask him what he thinks his wife would think about it.

Dolphins use franchise tag on Landry

MIAMI (AP)—The Miami Dolphins decided receiver Jarvis Landry is worth any headaches he causes, even if the cost is $16 million.

Landry was given a non-exclusive franchise tag Tuesday after leading the NFL with 112 catches in 2017. The move by the Dolphins came on the first day that teams could assign franchise tags.

The tag's value is expected to be about $16 million. Landry made $894,000 last season.

Landry has said he wanted to remain with the Dolphins, and they said they wanted him back. But his volatile personality has been cause for a concern -- especially on a team that went 6-10 last year in part because of poor discipline.

Landry was ejected in the fourth quarter of the season finale, a loss to Buffalo, and coach Adam Gase said the episode was embarrassing and "extremely bad." But Landry was by far the highest-profile Dolphins player eligible for free agency, and perhaps the best player on an offense that sputtered throughout 2017.

Miami still hopes to sign Landry to a multi-year deal, a person familiar with the team's plans said. The person didn't want to be identified because the Dolphins haven't publicly discussed contract negotiations with Landry.

Landry had a franchise-record 112 catches and a career-high nine touchdowns in 2017, the final season of the contract he signed before his rookie season. He has been selected to three consecutive Pro Bowls and has 400 career receptions, a record for a fourth-year player.

The non-exclusive tag allows Landry to sign an offer sheet with another team. The Dolphins could match that offer, and if Landry leaves, they would receive two first-round picks from his new team. Miami also could withdraw the tag.

Meanwhile, in Illinois, the Chicago Bears are parting with veteran guard Josh Sitton and linebacker Jerrell Freeman.

Two people familiar with the situation said Tuesday the Bears have decided to decline their option on Sitton for next season and release Freeman. The people spoke on the condition of anonymity because the team has not announced the moves.

A four-time Pro Bowl lineman, the 31-year-old Sitton spent the past two seasons in Chicago after an eight-year run with Green Bay. He signed with the Bears after the Packers released him just before the 2016 season. Sitton dealt with rib and ankle injuries last season and missed three games.

The 31-year-old Freeman suffered a season-ending pectoral injury in the opener last year and was suspended for violating the league's policy against performance-enhancing drugs in each of his two seasons with the Bears. The second violation resulted in a 10-game suspension in late October.

Freeman said on Twitter at the time that he also suffered a potentially career-ending concussion in the opener, providing context to the drug violation. He said he downplayed the severity of his head injury to family and friends.

Freeman led Chicago with 110 tackles in 2016 despite serving a four-game suspension for his first violation. He played for Indianapolis from 2012-15.

The Bears went 5-11 last season and finished last in the NFC North for the fourth straight year. Chicago fired coach John Fox and replaced him with Matt Nagy.

NFL Network first reported the Bears are declining Sitton's option, while Pro Football Talk was first with the news on Freeman.

Luck tells Indy fans he feels better, rules out more surgery

INDIANAPOLIS (AP)—Andrew Luck delivered some good news to Indianapolis Colts fans on Tuesday.

He feels better. He ruled out additional surgery. And he's eager to play football after spending the last 13 months rehabbing from shoulder surgery. If all goes well, the three-time Pro Bowl quarterback might even return in time for the start of April's offseason workouts.

Colts season-ticket holders couldn't have asked for a better town hall meeting.

"That is not an option for me," Luck said when Sports Illustrated reporter Peter King asked during a pre-taped interview if he might need more surgery. "Right now, that ship has sailed in my mind, which is also a bit of a relief. I'm not going to lie."

The answer drew loud applause from a nearly packed house.

Still, skepticism is understandable after the turns and twists of last season.

Luck had surgery for a partially torn labrum in January 2017. He, general manager Chris Ballard and then coach Chuck Pagano all spent months optimistically talking about Luck's long-awaited return, only to watch the process continue to drag on. Team owner Jim Irsay joined the chorus in August, suggesting Luck would return to game action in September.

But things didn't work out as anticipated.

Instead, the top overall draft pick in 2012 missed all of Indy's offseason workouts, all of training camp and all of the preseason. After sitting out the first month of the regular season, Luck finally started throwing a football.

Two weeks later, team officials shut him down after he complained of lingering soreness. He spent the next few weeks seeking opinions about a second surgery before going on season-ending injured reserve in November.

Luck then headed to Europe, where he continued rehabbing until returning to the team complex days before last season's finale.

He hadn't spoken publicly about the shoulder since Dec. 29, so the fact he's talking now could be a promising sign even though a throwing timeline remains unclear.

"I'm in the middle of a little bit of throwing," Luck explained without saying whether he was using a football or another object. "But I'm really preparing and strengthening the shoulder to handle the throwing load of an NFL quarterback, to make sure the shoulder can handle it."

A healthy Luck, the No. 3 pick in the upcoming draft and tens of millions of dollars in salary-cap space presumably could have made Indy's coaching vacancy the most attractive opening this offseason.

3-team trade sends Drury to Yankees, Souza to Diamondbacks

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. (AP)—The

Arizona Diamondbacks sent infielder Brandon Drury to the New York Yankees and received outfielder Steven Souza Jr. from the Tampa Bay Rays in a three-team trade Tuesday that included five players plus two to be named later.

The deal was announced one day after former Diamondbacks slugger J.D. Martinez agreed to a $110 million, five-year contract with Boston, pending a physical. Arizona has moved quickly to fill that hole in the outfield, signing speedy Jarrod Dyson to a $7.5 million, two-year contract on Monday before trading for Souza.

Souza will be the starter at one corner outfield position, with Dyson subbing at all three spots.

Drury gives the Yankees a new option at third base or second base, where New York was projected to start a pair of rookies.

Top pitching prospect Anthony Banda goes from Arizona to the Rays, who also get minor league second baseman Nick Solak from the Yankees and two players to be named from the Diamondbacks. Minor league right-hander Taylor Widener moves from New York to Arizona.

Drury played mostly second base for Arizona but came up through the minors as a third baseman and could fill that spot for the Yankees, who have top prospect Gleyber Torres penciled in at second. Another prospect, Miguel Andujar, was a leading candidate at third.

New York traded All-Star second baseman Starlin Castro to Miami this offseason in the blockbuster deal for slugger Giancarlo Stanton. Chase Headley was sent to San Diego in a cost-cutting swap, and fellow third baseman Todd Frazier signed with the cross-town Mets as a free agent.

The 25-year-old Drury also has experience in the corner outfield spots, but the Yankees are well stocked there.

Souza helps fill a power void in Arizona's outfield created by Martinez's departure. Martinez had 29 home runs and 65 RBI in 62 games with Arizona last season after being acquired from Detroit, but the Diamondbacks knew it was a long shot they'd be able to afford to retain him.

Drury hit .267 with 13 home runs and 63 RBI in 135 games for Arizona last season. To make room for him on the 40-man roster, the Yankees designated outfielder Jabari Blash for assignment.

Souza, 28, batted .239 with a career-high 30 home runs and 78 RBI last year. He had a .351 on-base percentage and .810 OPS.

Drury was the odd man out in a crowded middle infield for Arizona. Chris Owings or Ketel Marte could shift to second from shortstop, where Nick Ahmed also is back from injury. Daniel Descalso can play all the infield positions, plus the outfield.

Drury came to Arizona from Atlanta as part of the Justin Upton trade in 2013 and worked his way up through the Diamondbacks' minor league system. He isn't eligible for arbitration until next year.

Banda, 24, made his major league debut last season, going 2/3 with a 5.96 ERA in eight appearances, four starts. The left-hander was 8-7 with a 5.39 ERA in 22 starts for Triple-A Reno last year.

The 23-year-old Solak split last season between Class A Tampa and Double-A Trenton, batting .297 with 12 homers and 53 RBI.

Widener, 23, will be a non-roster invitee to Diamondbacks spring training. He was 7-8 with a 3.39 ERA in 21 starts for Class A Tampa last season and advanced to Double-A Trenton, where he was 1-0 with a 3.00 ERA in two relief appearances. He threw the final five innings of a no-hitter against Binghamton on Sept. 8.

Cavs, Warriors ready for sprint to finish

CLEVELAND (AP)—LeBron James had a trophy in his hands and a smile on his face.

That was Sunday at the All-Star Game, when James again rose above the NBA's best in winning a game and MVP honors.

What he really wants is to be celebrating in the postseason, not midseason.

The NBA's sprint to the finish begins Thursday with James riding high but starting again from back in the pack as Cleveland tries to catch Toronto and Boston in the Eastern Conference.

"We just added four new guys before the break, and we have a lot of work to do," James said. "So I really don't like to think that too far ahead. But obviously winning championships is what it's all about. That's what this league is all about and hopefully at the end of the road then I have the Cavs there to actually compete for one, to be in a

Blazers hope for another post-All-Star break revival

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP)—The Trail Blazers have enjoyed post-All-Star break revivals the past two seasons.

Those late-season rallies will no doubt be an ongoing theme in the congested Western Conference playoff race once Portland resumes play on Friday in Utah.

"I mean, I think that's in the back of our minds. We know that we're usually a better team in the second half of the season," Portland guard Damian Lillard said. "We can't just go into it saying, 'All right, we're always good at this part of the season.' I think mentally we have to understand how close of a race it is and that we've got to be sharp all the way through."

Portland is 32-26 at the break, tied for sixth in the West, which is better off than it was last season at the same point.

But the Blazers are one of five teams in the West with 26 losses. The Warriors and Houston Rockets sit comfortably atop the standings with the next eight teams jostling for position.

The Blazers headed into the All-Star Game with a 123-117 victory over Golden State, snapping a seven-game losing streak to the Warriors. Lillard had 44 points, his third straight game with 39 or more and the best scoring stretch of his career. His 133 points over the last three games is the best such run in franchise history.

Afterward, Lillard sounded like he was taking it upon himself to improve the Blazers' playoff position.

"Each season, it's always a few teams that fall by the wayside and we've just got to make sure we're not one of them," he said. "As a leader, I've got to be the guy to lead that charge."

In 2015-16, Portland was 27-27 at the All-Star break after winning eight of nine games going into it. The Blazers finished the regular season 44-38 and in fifth place in the West. They got past the Clippers in the first round of the playoffs before falling to the Warriors in the conference semifinals.

Last season, Portland lost three straight games to go into the break at 23-33. Shortly thereafter, an overtime loss at Detroit put them 11 games under .500.

But in March, Portland caught fire and went 13-3, best in the NBA. Lillard was named the conference's Player of the Month, averaging 29.1 points, 4.4 rebounds, 6.0 assists and 1.4 steals in 16 games. Terry Stotts was named Coach of the Month.

Center Jusuf Nurkic, who came to Portland in a trade a handful of days before the All-Star break, went on to average 15.2 points, 10.4 rebounds and 1.9 blocks in 20 games with the Blazers. Portland was 14-5 with the 7-footer in the starting lineup.

finals representing the East."

The Golden State Warriors are also in the unusual position of pursuers, after red-hot Houston passed them for the league's best record with 10 straight wins leading into the All-Star break. But nobody would count out the Warriors, not with their star-studded group that has won two of the last three titles.

Cleveland is the unknown, even with James. The Cavaliers added new pieces around him earlier this month, and there's not a lot of time left to build championship chemistry.

The Cavs went into the break with four straight wins, but they're still just third in the conference and couldn't gain any ground on the Raptors, who have won seven straight to pass the Celtics.

PALM BEACH GARDENS, Fla. (AP)—Tiger Woods will be in France this year for the Ryder Cup as a vice captain.

Still to be determined is whether he gets to play.

U.S. captain Jim Furyk appointed Woods and Steve Stricker as two more of his vice captains for the Sept. 28-30 matches at Le Golf National. Furyk previously selected two-time Ryder Cup captain Davis Love III to assist him.

Woods has said he'd like to play and be a vice captain. Furyk hasn't ruled that out. He will have five assistants with him at the Ryder Cup, and there are only four matches on the course at any time until Sunday singles.

"It's possible," Furyk said Tuesday. "Whether that's Toronto is an NBA-best 24-4 at home and could make the Cavs' NBA Finals plans difficult if they have to go through Canada.

"We would hope so, but we've got to get there," Raptors All-Star guard Kyle Lowry said. "We've got to finish the season strong."

Much of the work is already done, since the NBA's earlier start to this season means teams are well beyond the midway point of their schedules. They will have about 25 games remaining, with so much to sort out in both conferences.

It's a two-team race at the top of the West but things are tight well beyond that. San Antonio is just percentage points ahead of Minnesota for third while still hoping Kawhi Leonard returns from his thigh injury, and it's a gap of only 4 1/2 games from there to 10th place, where the Utah Jazz have won 11 straight.

The East has a close race for fourth place and home-court advantage in the first round between Washington and Indiana, and positioning to be settled down the bottom of the bracket, where Milwaukee, Philadelphia and Miami hold the final three spots.

But the biggest question might be the Celtics, who slumped into the break with three straight losses after leading the conference most of the season, and now have one team ahead of them and another behind that has the momentum.

"The Raptors have been playing really well. Cleveland has been playing really well. But we've got to get back to playing really well, too," the Celtics' Jaylen Brown said. "So as the season moves forward, we're looking forward to getting back to the top spot."

Same with the Warriors, who were hurt by the longer-than-usual time it took to reach the break. They were just 6-4 in their last 10 games and at 44-14 already have more losses than they averaged over the last three seasons (13).

Coach Steve Kerr made it clear that his team needed a rest and now that the Warriors had it, they're ready to try to reel in the Rockets.

"We've got 20-something games before the playoffs to chase another championship," All-Star Stephen Curry said. "So, ready to hit the ground running when we get back."

Woods, Stricker to be vice captains at Ryder Cup

the best thing for the team, we'll see."

Woods is returning from a fourth back surgery that has limited his golf to just 19 tournaments since the first of those surgeries a week before the 2014 Masters. He last played in the Ryder Cup in 2012 at Medinah, where he went 0-3-1.

Woods was a vice captain at Hazeltine for the 2016 Ryder Cup, when the Americans beat Europe for the first time in eight years. He also was an assistant at the Presidents Cup last fall. Players and other assistants have described him as being heavily involved.

Stricker, the Presidents Cup captain last year, will be a vice captain in the third straight Ryder Cup.

Woods has a 13-17-3 record in his seven appearances as a player in the Ryder Cup. He has played on only one winning team, in 1999 at The Country Club in Brookline, Massachusetts. He was a captain's pick only in Wales in 2010.

"I want to do what's best for Tiger and I want to do what's best for the team, and that would be a bridge we cross when we got there," Furyk said. "If he could be valuable as a player, I'm sure we would want him playing on this team. But there's so much time to go."

Woods tied for 23rd last month at Torrey Pines, and then missed the cut last week at Riviera. He is playing the Honda Classic this week, and likely has one more start at Bay Hill ahead of the Masters. He is No. 544 in the world ranking and not eligible for World Golf Championships, which offer higher Ryder Cup points.

"I think the good news-bad news for someone like Tiger Woods is: He's played what? Three or four events? And we're already talking Ryder Cup," Furyk said. "That's the nature of being Tiger Woods and obviously being one of the greatest players or the greatest player of all time. I'm anxious to see how he plays, so see how things go and we'll do what's best for him and the team."

Shirley's Coffee Shop takes last semis seat

Shirley's Coffee Shop advanced to the semifinals of the 2017 Tan Holdings Inter-Company Basketball League after winning the tiebreak against POI Aviation.

POI and Shirley's finished the double-round robin elimination with similar 4-6 records to place behind early semis qualifiers Fiesta Resort & Spa Saipan (10-0), Kanoa (7-3), and Saipan Tribune (5-5). To break the tie and decide the winner of the fourth and last semis berth, league organizers implemented a point system, dividing the total points scored by total points allowed.

In 10 games, Shirley's earned 606 points and yielded 631 for a quotient of 0.96, just 0.05 ahead of POI, which collected 582 points and gave up 637.

The last game in the elimination round proved to be a crucial factor in Shirley's and POI's semis chances.

Both teams dropped their matches last Friday, but Shirley's fell behind by only 5 points against Fiesta Resort (70-65), while POI lost to Saipan Tribune by 11, 47-58.

With Shirley's winning the tiebreak and the last semis ticket that went with the victory, the squad earned the right to challenge unbeaten Fiesta in the first Final Four game tomorrow. Saipan Tribune and Kanoa will play in the second semis match.

Kanoa will enter the semis tiff coming off a tough 60-55 win over the Lower Base Warriors.

The second-ranked squad played without main gunner Douglas Schmidt, leaving Dindo Pablo the task to carry the cudgels for Kanoa. Pablo responded to the challenge by exploding for 30 points and leading Kanoa's comeback from behind victory.

Kanoa stared at a 4-point deficit at the break, 32-36, but turned the tables on Lower Base in the second half, thanks to Pablo's hot shooting. The veteran guard scored 11 straight points in the second half, including three triples to lead Kanoa's fightback. Benjie Sison then provided the finishing touches in Kanoa's complete recovery after drilling 5 of the squad's last 9 markers. Lowell Lumauag and Moises De Arroz tallied the two other field goals for Kanoa, which is hoping for Schmidt's return in its make-or-break game against Saipan Tribune tomorrow.

Fake Madrid played even better and this time Kaden Church starred for the undefeated squad after hitting four goals. Rintaro Miyawaki and Katrina Costales added two, while Joyce made one more.

In other results, top-ranked Bruv fended off ABCD FC in the second half for a 5-2 victory.

The Bruv-ABCD FC semis tiff in the co-ed U18 division was tied at the break with the former drawing its lone goal from John Michael Rojas and the latter from Dai Podziewski. Then after a so-so offense in the first half, Bruv got its rhythm in the second with Gillian Villagomez knocking in a pair and Guine Borja and Mareko Tekopua contributing one each. ABCD FC, on the other hand, still struggled with only Krizel Tuazon scoring in the second half.

With the win, Bruv earned the first finals berth and will face the winner of Suplex City-CTSI Petmalu semis game in the championship match tomorrow. The Kensington-backed Suplex City and CTSI Petmalu will battle for the last finals slot tonight at 7:30pm.

"It was a tough decision to make since there are a lot of good players. But, I have

J.J. Lifofoi closed out for the Falcons and had a quick 1-2-3 inning in the sixth before giving manager Doru Camacho some anxious moments in the seventh. He gave up a leadoff walk to Greg Sablan and a single to Lorenzo Sibetang to put two runners on base. A wild pitch had both runners advancing, but Lifofoi bounced back when he struck out Kier Agda. Sablan scored on a Chris George RBI single, while Sibetang moved to third and later stole home for the Blue Jays' second run.

Lifofoi then retired Neldreyton Skerei to move closer to ending the game by way of the 10-run rule, but he walked Noel Cabrera and designated hitter Mark Toves had an RBI single to bring in George. Cabrera moved 90 feet away from home plate, while Toves advanced to second on a passed ball to keep the Jays' comeback bid alive. Lifofoi, however, ended their plans when he struck out Kimo Angailen.

Bradley Lieto's five RBIs for the Falcons included a two-RBI single at the top of the seventh when the game was getting out of the Blue Jays' reach. He also made it to home plate four times on a 2-for-4 batting.

Meanwhile, GSM was looking for its second straight win last night as it played against Outlaws, while SBL action will resume on Monday. No matches will be played tonight and tomorrow to give way to a visiting South Korean baseball team that will be using the field for practice and scrimmage.

Fake Madrid and Betde eased their way to the finals after dominating their respective opponents at the start of the playoff round of Saipan Soccer School's 2018 Youth Futsal Tournament last Tuesday night at the TSL Sports Complex.

Betde took the first finals seat in the co-ed U12 division following an 11-1 demolition of Kanoa Ali'i, while Fake Madrid marched into the title game in the co-ed U15 age group after clobbering Marianas United, 16-0.

Betde had too many options on offense and much-experienced players that it was hard for the unseasoned Kanoa Ali'i crew to keep up with their heavily favored foes. With Betde having the edge in their semis duel, it jumped to a 7-0 lead in the first half and never looked back to cruise to victory.

Mark Costales led Betde's strong start, as he scored a pair of goals, while Kaitlyn Chavez, Wataru Kadokura, Anthony Austria, Mark Roque, and Julie Capayas added one each. Kadokura and Roque then completed a hat trick in the second half, as they each added two more goals to Betde's total.

Kanoa Ali'i's lone goal came from Tyler Omelau and with the loss, the team will just play in the consolation game tomorrow against the loser of the Tinsel Toes-CTSI Petmalu semis tiff. Tinsel Toes and CTSI Petmalu will dispute the last finals berth today at 5:30pm and the winner will challenge Betde in the one-game title showdown tomorrow.
